16:30 – 17:30 4. Harmonisation of reporting and monitoring requirements in government-backed reporting frameworks and disclosure legislation

Over recent years it has become standard practice for companies in the garment and footwear sector to report on their efforts to identify and address labour, human rights and environment risks in their operations and supply chains, primarily in the form of an annual sustainability or CSR report. At the same time, businesses have seen a rise in mandatory and voluntary disclosure requirements concerning labour and environmental supply chain due diligence, driven by investors, government regulations, multi-stakeholder and industry reporting requirements and third-party benchmarks.

In last year’s OECD Garment Forum we heard strongly from businesses and stakeholders on the need to harmonise due diligence disclosure and to bring it in alignment with the OECD Guidance. At the same time benchmarks have pointed out that voluntary company reporting is not meeting expectations, given low benchmark scores which indicate a failure to implement due diligence effectively (CHRB Key Findings 2019).

One issue is the quality and alignment of company reporting, another is the difficulty in assessing and providing feedback on a company’s report.

Governments have a role to play in addressing this fragmentation and to improve uptake, both through its own role as a legislator, and through facilitating collaboration for harmonisation of tools and standards among governments.

In this session we will hear ideas on how governments can seek greater alignment with the OECD Guidance and with other monitoring and reporting frameworks for their own disclosure requirements for companies in the sector. The session will also consider what is at stake in the battle for one common due diligence assessment framework and public reporting framework for the sector.

Please see the OECD Garment Forum session note Mandatory Due Diligence, taking stock and looking forward for useful background information.
