

Development of a handbook on human rights due diligence focusing on child labour and forced labour in the cocoa sector

2022-2023

This flyer provides information about a project to develop a handbook that will help businesses identify, prevent and address risks related to human rights issues, including child labour and forced labour, in the cocoa sector. The handbook will guide businesses working in the cocoa supply chain to translate commitment into action.

The challenge

Companies operating in the cocoa sector face inevitable salient human rights issues, notably with respect to child labour and forced labour. Understanding how in practice to identify, prevent and address human rights risks and impacts is a challenge.

Companies increasingly recognise that they have a role to play in the way that business decisions – including sourcing and relationships with suppliers – can impact people, society and the planet. Such a recognition is also emerging through regulations on human rights due diligence by businesses. While this trend for more regulations, including the ongoing EU legislative procedure on sustainable corporate governance, serves as driver for companies to carry out human rights due diligence, several implementation barriers persist particularly in complex and fragmented agricultural supply chains.

A number of companies are aware of the need to implement robust systems and services that responsibly and transparently prevent and remediate adverse impacts on human rights, such as child labour and forced labour, along the cocoa supply chain and in cocoa growing communities. Companies implementing such systems and services need practical support.

Help addressing human rights risks, above all child labour and forced labour, in the cocoa sector

An estimated 1.56 million children are in child labour in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana. Studies show that most of the children who work on cocoa farms do so within their household or extended family.

What can now be done to further support companies in improving and accelerating their efforts in working towards and then ensuring promoting and protecting human rights in their own operations and supply chains? Companies in the cocoa sector can benefit from actionable recommendations and concrete examples to operationalise due diligence and existing resources and tools to strengthen its effectiveness.

Scheduled for completion in 2023, the project is led by the OECD Centre for Responsible Business Conduct (RBC Centre) and the International Cocoa Initiative (ICI), with funding from the Federal Ministry for Economic Cooperation and Development (BMZ).

The handbook will:

- Promote a common understanding of human rights risks and impacts, with a focus on child labour and forced labour, in the cocoa sector and help companies progress towards meeting regulation on human rights due diligence.
- Provide clarity on how companies can use OECD risk-based due diligence to address risks related to human rights in the cocoa supply chain.
- Highlight how companies, especially downstream companies in the cocoa supply chain, can implement OECD due diligence to address human rights risks effectively.
- Provide illustrative examples on key aspects of OECD risk-based due diligence. This will include good practices that will help companies to map supply chain and sector risks, examples of remediation and examples of collaboration to address child labour and forced labour along the cocoa supply chain and in the cocoa sector.
- Reflect as appropriate how different supply chain actors can use existing good practices and tools for due diligence, taking into consideration company size, context of operation, business models, and position in the supply chain.
- Reference leading multi-stakeholder, industry and policy initiatives, including existing tools and approaches.

Proposed approach for development of the handbook

The handbook will build on the recommendations of the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises (2011), the OECD-FAO Guidance for Responsible Agricultural Supply Chain (2016) and the OECD Due Diligence Guidance for Responsible Business Conduct (2018) and focus on effective implementation of OECD risk-based due diligence.

The OECD risk-based due diligence framework provides a step-by-step approach for companies to integrate due diligence into their operations and supply chains and recommends specific actions to mitigate risks. By implementing risk-based due diligence, companies can systematically identify, prevent, assess, mitigate and account for how they address the actual and potential adverse impacts on human rights such as child labour and forced labour in their operations and business relationships.

This handbook will also draw on current good practices in due diligence identified by ongoing global initiatives to build responsible cocoa supply chains.

Indicative timeline

The development of the handbook started in early 2022 and it is scheduled for completion in 2023.

How can you get involved?

A participatory process is key to designing a pragmatic handbook. The OECD and the ICI are convening an informal multi-stakeholder group of experts in child labour and forced labour issues and cocoa sector with specialists from both public and private organisations and target users, such as business practitioners from large companies to small- and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), to ensure the end-product is fit for purpose. Three meetings with this informal expert group (IEG) will take place to help shape the handbook. This will include workshops in Côte d'Ivoire and Geneva and an online public consultation to collect feedback that will be taken into account when finalising the handbook.
